GOLF FORMATS

AMBROSE [RECOMMENDED]

This is the most popular format as it allows for a good pace of play with a large number of players and gives everyone a chance at winning, irrelevant of their experience. Each team member hits a tee shot at each hole, but the second and succeeding shots are played from where the best shot of the four lands. Play continues until the ball is holed out.

BEST BALL

Each player hits their own ball in this competition, but only the lowest score from among the group is recorded as the official score for the group for that hole. The Best Ball format allows for each player to play a full round of golf, but still allows for less experienced golfers to contribute to and be part of a winning team.

ALTERNATE SHOT

Two-player teams hit one ball between them, with one player hitting all the odd-numbered shots and the second player hitting all the even-numbered shots. Players alternate hitting tee shots, so that one player doesn't have to hit every single tee shot.

STABLEFORD

The Stableford format awards points for shots made depending on a player's handicap. A point value is assigned for a birdie, par, eagle, bogey, double bogey or triple bogey based on a formula. The player with the highest number of stableford points, wins the competition
